

SCOTTISH BORDERS ITINERARY - 4 DAYS

01

The Scottish Borders are home to a series of magnificent ruined abbeys which are linked by the Borders Abbeys Way: a 107km circular route, featuring some of the Borders' oldest historic abbeys in the region, including Melrose, Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Kelso.

Jedburgh Abbey

Jedburgh Abbey was founded by David I in around 1138 for Augustinian canons. Remains of the cloister buildings have been uncovered and finds from the excavations, including the 12th-century 'Jedburgh comb' and an 8th-century shrine are on display. Your clients can compare the Romanesque and early Gothic styles of architecture of the huge abbey church or walk in the recreated cloister garden famous for its sweet scent of herbs – the same ones used in the past in the medieval abbey.

Distance between Jedburgh Abbey and Kelso Abbey is 12.2 miles/19.6km

Kelso Abbey

Kelso Abbey was built in 1128 and in the years following and it is one of the finest examples of Romanesque architecture in Scotland. Once the grandest of Border Abbeys, Kelso was subject to cannon fire by Henry VIII's armies during the Rough Wooing of the 1540s. However, even in its fragmentary state, Kelso Abbey is a superb piece of architecture where your clients can enjoy a free visit and walk among the remains of this spectacular church.

Dryburgh Abbey

First established in 1150, Dryburgh Abbey became the premier house in Scotland of the Premonstratensian order and today continues to have a peaceful atmosphere. Despite having been set on fire three times, the chapter house features paintwork that dates back to its construction and boasts some of the best Gothic architecture in Scotland. Your clients can explore this remarkably complete medieval ruin surrounded by beautiful grounds by the River Tweed to grasp the appeal of old monastic life.

Melrose Abbey

Probably the most famous ruin in Scotland, Melrose Abbey was founded by David I in 1136 for the Cistercian Order, and it was largely destroyed by Richard II's English army in 1385. Your clients will discover that the exterior of this magnificent ruin is decorated by unusual sculptures, including hobgoblins, cooks with ladles and a bagpipe playing pig. The abbey is also thought to be the burial place of Robert the Bruce's heart, marked with a commemorative carved stone plaque within the grounds.
