Musselburgh Links

The Open was held over the course six times and five local golfers won the competition 11 times between them. Sample the delights of this famous 9-hole course with hickory or modern clubs. Visitors are always welcome. Documentary evidence shows that golf was played on Musselburgh links as far back as 1672 although it is suggested that Mary, Queen of Scots played golf here in 1567.

Newhailes House & Gardens

Cared for by the National Trust for Scotland. Newhailes is one of the most impressive 17th century Palladian villas in Scotland. Home to peaceful woodland walks, extensive structural and decorative detailing and once one of the most impressive private libraries in Scotland, it is widely regarded as a prominent historical fixture in the Scottish Enlightenment. Children will love running around the adventure play park, Weehailes, which will remind your clients of something they might find in a children's fairy tale book.

Kilspindie Golf Course

Kilspindie is the 35th oldest club in the world and immensely proud of its heritage. Several holes run along the shoreline and there are splendid views. The par three 8th hole overlooking Gosford Bay is the hole that most visitors remember. It demands a testing tee shot that must carry across the beach with the ever-present wind making life even more difficult. Whilst not the longest course by modern standards Kilspindie is an ideal destination for golfers of all standards and is a true links course in every respect.
